

Perturbation Annotation Task

When Claims Evolve — Practical Course, SoSe 2026

Annotator: Wenzé

Language: Mandarin Chinese

Date prepared: June 05, 2026

Project Background

This annotation task is part of a research pipeline investigating how misinformation claims evolve online. We apply systematic perturbations — automated text transformations — to fact-checked social media posts to simulate the kinds of edits real users make when spreading or distorting information. We then test whether automated fact-checking systems can still match the perturbed claim to the original fact-check.

Your Task

Section 1	Review the 8 LLM perturbation prompts used to generate Mandarin Chinese outputs. Each prompt is shown alongside its English reference. Flag anything that sounds unnatural, incorrect, or unclear in your language.
Section 2	Verify 5 social media posts, each showing all 8 LLM perturbations. For each perturbation, judge: (1) was it correctly applied? (2) does the output sound natural? (3) was the meaning handled correctly?

Please fill in the form (digitally or by hand) and return it by replying to the email with this PDF attached.

Thank you very much for your help!

Section 1 — Prompt Review

Below are the 8 LLM perturbation prompts used for Mandarin Chinese. For each, the English reference is shown on the left and the Mandarin Chinese prompt is on the right. Please review whether the instructions make sense in your language.
